women; the prosperous middle classes and their new shops, such as Peter Jones and Harrods; entertaining and servants, food and drink; unlimited liability and bankruptcy; the rich, the marriage market, taxes and anti-semitism; the Empire, recruitment and press-gangs. The period begins with the closing of the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons and ends with the first (steam-operated) Underground trains and the first Gilbert & Sullivan. During the formative years of the Industrial Revolution, English workers and artisans claimed a place in society that would shape the following centuries. But the capitalist elite did not form the working class—the workers shaped their own creations, developing a shared identity in the process. Being middle class was defined by taking responsibility for one's self, one's family and the community but the precise terms of this were open to individual interpretation. The success of the middle-classes in the Victorian period can be seen in their ability to universalise a set of principles based on individuality and progress. Middle-class values were carved out in these attempts to define a society based on merit rather than aristocratic privilege. The Public Culture of the Victorian Middle Class. Ritual and Authority in the English Industrial City, 1840-1914 by Simon Gunn, (Manchester University Press, 2000). Class edited by Patrick Joyce (Oxford University Press, 1995). The Making of the British Middle Class? Established middle class - This is the most gregarious and the second wealthiest of all the class groups. They work in traditional professions and socialise with a wide variety of people, and take part in a wide variety of cultural activities. Technical middle class - This is a small, distinctive and prosperous new class group. They prefer emerging culture, such as social media, and mix mainly among themselves. The elites are concentrated around London and the South of England. As you can see from the map, the darkest areas - which correspond to concentration of elites - are mainly in London and the South of England. Photo: BBC. They have a higher proportion of graduates in their class than any of the others, except those at the very top of society. Photo: BBC.
