Acc This article highlights succinctly some of the main arguments I have elaborated in the book Beyond Retribution: Seeking Justice in the Shadows of War. (Cambridge: Polity and Blackwell Publishers, 2002), and other articles I have written subsequently on these issues. In the interest of brevity, notes and references are reduced to the minimum, and interested readers are referred to the book for details of issues and illustrative cases mentioned here. Proposes a "social compact"™ between all stakeholders in post-conflict societies. 2 Of the vast new literature on transitional justice, a still-valid Mani explores the prospects of achieving justice in post-conflict situations in order to realize lasting peace. The book examines the challenges of building peace with justice in contemporary conflicts. Mani criticizes practitioners and philosophers alike for not being cognizant of the fact that policy prescriptions need to account for the fact that the societies in which pressures for justice exist are also very poor. What is more, they have failed to conceive of post-conflict justice as entailing three interrelated aspects: legal justice or the rule of law; rectificatory justice; and distrib
