Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, or AIDS, is a chronic infectious condition caused by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), especially HIV-1. The primary mechanism by which the virus causes AIDS is by damaging the immune system. HIV is transmitted by sexual contact, needles, surgical or nonsurgical procedures (parenteral), and it may also be transmitted from a mother to her child. Immune suppression caused by lack of nutrients has been called nutritionally acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, or NAIDS. Lack of zinc, of which only about 1 mg is needed every day to replace losses, leads to virtual disappearance of the thymus, a key immunological organ. Thus micronutrient deficiencies often increase risk and severity of infectious diseases. Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (usually referred to as AIDS) is an (at present) incurable disease caused by long-term infection with the Human Immunodeficiency Virus. In 2017, the Specialty Pharmacy Times, "When combatting viruses such as HIV, several enzymes in the immune system may malfunction and cause cancer-related mutations, according to a new study published by Nature Communications."
