Minoan art features nature scenes suggesting cooperation with nature rather than conflict. We get bull leaping (with both male and female athletes) rather than the killing of bulls. We don't have warfare reflected in the surviving artworks, and we don't see lots in the way of preparation for fighting. Excavating Mycenaean sites shows a culture similar in some ways to Minoan culture, but, in one important way, substantially different. We have shaft graves filled with weapons, and walled cities prepared for defense. Land warfare a much greater feature of Mycenaean society than Minoan society. The poems of Homer, set in Mycenaean times, suggest a people for whom warfare stood at the heart of economic success. Minoan and Mycenaean Art. Average rating: 0 out of 5 stars, based on 0 reviews.
