-Greek and Roman mythology is quite generally supposed to show us the way the human race thought and felt untold ages ago. -We have come to appreciate the Greek and Roman mythology because:-Little distinction was made between the real and unreal; -They are unlike the uncivilized peoples everywhere who lived in prehistoric wilderness, where terror and magic and human sacrifice were rampant. Greeks have the naiads, dryads and nymphs in their forests; the daughters of Poseidon in the seas and the Four winds in the sky-The Greeks too had their roots in primeval slime, but what the myths show is ho...Â The elephant in the Greek and Roman World (aspects of Greek and Roman life)Documents. Home Maps Index Explore Random Page. By the Roman age the traditional stories of Greek myth had long since ceased to reflect popular culture. Mythology had become instead a central element in elite culture. It had to be learned in school, as illustrated by the extraordinary amount of elementary mythological information in the many surviving ancient commentaries on the classics, notably Servius, who offers a mythical story for almost every person, place, and even plant Vergil mentions. Commentators used the classics as pegs on which to hang stories they thought their students should know. A surprisingly large number of mythographic treatises survive from the early empire, and many papyrus fragments from lost works prove that they were in common use.

In spite of the title this is NOT a history of Greek and Roman Warfare, but rather a series of essays organized according to topic. The quality of the writing varies enormously, from the superb prose of Lendon to the difficult and almost unreadable essays by Hornblower and Hall. The best essays are those by Hanson (historiography of ancient warfare) Whitby (reconstructing ancient Warfare) Strauss (Naval Combat and sieges) Billows (international relations) Sekunda (Land forces) Roth (War) Sabin (land battles) Serrati (Warfare and the state).
